

Acknowledgments

The editors wish to acknowledge the valuable support of the Academy of the Social Sciences in Australia (ASSA), which provided a grant to conduct the symposium at which early versions of the chapters in this volume were initially presented.

ACADEMY OF THE SOCIAL SCIENCES
IN AUSTRALIA

The editors also gratefully acknowledge additional support for the symposium which was provided by the University of Sydney Business School.

THE UNIVERSITY OF SYDNEY
—
Business School

The editors wish to thank Rawya Mansour most sincerely for her editorial and administrative support in organising the symposium and the production of this volume.

Contributors

Editors

Keith Hancock AO is Emeritus Professor of Economics at Flinders University of South Australia, where he served as Vice-Chancellor between 1980 and 1987. He was Senior Deputy President of the Australian Industrial Relations Commission from 1987 to 1997. He headed two major Commonwealth government reviews: on National Superannuation (1974-1977) and Australian Industrial Relations Law and Systems (1983-1985). He has undertaken pioneering work on Australian labour markets and his definitive Australian Wage Policy: Infancy and Adolescence was published by the University of Adelaide in 2013. He continues his work on the history of wage setting in Australia.

Russell D Lansbury AM is Emeritus Professor of Work and Organisational Studies at the University of Sydney. He has served as President of the International Labour and Employment Relations Association and of the Australian Labour and Employment Relations Association. He was the foundation Director of the Australian Centre for Industrial Relations Research and Teaching (ACIRRT) at the University of Sydney and is a former joint editor of the Journal of Industrial Relations. His recent research has focused on the impact of management strategies in multinational enterprises on employment relations and labour practices.

Contributors

Marian Baird AO is Professor of Employment Relations and Director of the Women and Work Research Group in the University of Sydney Business School. Marian is co-editor of the Journal of Industrial Relations and is on the editorial board of the Australian Bulletin of Labour and the international journal Community, Work and Family. She is a Fellow of the Academy of the Social Sciences in Australia (ASSA), a Fellow of the University of Sydney Senate, a member of the Women's College Council and on the Research Committee of the Diversity Council of Australia. Marian is one of Australia's leading researchers in the fields of women, work and family.

Mark Bray has held the Foundation Chair in Employment Studies at the University of Newcastle since 1997. His current research interests include the role of tribunals in promoting cooperation at work and the changing roles of awards and collective agreements in Australian industrial relations.

Rae Cooper is Associate Professor in Work and Organisational Studies at the University of Sydney Business School. Rae is Associate Dean (Undergraduate Business) where she oversees her School's Undergraduate programs. As a researcher, Rae specialises in employment relations and is presently working on an ARC-funded project on flexible working arrangements. She also undertakes research on gender and work more broadly; regulation and collective bargaining; and care workers and vulnerable labour. Rae is Associate Editor of the Journal of Industrial Relations and co-author of the leading employment relations reference book in the region: Employment Relations: Theory and Practice.

Peter Harris AO is Chairman of the Productivity Commission. He has previously served as Secretary of the Commonwealth Department of Broadband, Communications and the Digital Economy, and the Victorian Government agencies responsible for Sustainability and the Environment; Primary Industries; and Public Transport. He has worked for the Ansett-Air New Zealand aviation group and as a consultant on transport policy. In 2013, he was made an Officer of the Order of Australia 'for distinguished service to public administration through leadership and policy reform roles in the areas of telecommunications, the environment, primary industry and transport'.

Johanna Macneil is a senior lecturer in Employment Relations at the University of Newcastle. Previously she worked as an industrial relations consultant and as a senior researcher at the National Key Centre in Industrial Relations at Monash University. Johanna is interested in the role of third parties in facilitating collective bargaining, particularly using mixed/interest-based processes.

Damian Oliver is currently Deputy Director (Business Development) of the Centre for Management and Organisation Studies at the University of Technology Sydney (UTS). He is an applied researcher who is interested in the world of work, especially how it intersects with education and training. His research career has included positions at the Workplace Relations Centre, University of Sydney (as acting Director); Griffith University; the University of Duisburg-Essen (Germany); and the National Centre for Vocational Education Research, Adelaide.

Sue Richardson AM was Director of NILS from 2000-2008. Before that, she worked in the School of Economics at the University of Adelaide. She has a five-year term as a member of the Fair Work Commission's Expert Panel and was a member of its predecessor, the Minimum Wage Panel. She was President of the Academy of the Social Sciences in Australia from 2003-2006. She led a Foresighting Cluster that advised the Prime Minister's Science, Engineering and Innovation Council on major long-term policy challenges. From 2004-2009, she was a Commissioner of the Essential Services Commission of South Australia. She has been a part-time Commissioner with the Industry Commission, a member of the Ministerial Inquiry into Skills in South Australia and co-editor of the Economic Record.

Andrew Stewart is the John Bray Professor of Law at the University of Adelaide, a consultant to the national law firm Piper Alderman, co-editor of the Australian Journal of Labour Law and President of the Australian Labour Law Association. One of Australia's leading experts in employment law and workplace relations, his current research includes ARC-funded projects on the regulation of work experience and the role of industrial tribunals in promoting workplace cooperation. Andrew's many publications include Stewart's Guide to Employment Law, now in its 5th edition, and Creighton & Stewart's Labour Law (6th edition, 2016).

Chris F Wright is a Senior Lecturer in Work and Organisational Studies at the University of Sydney Business School. He received his PhD from the University of Cambridge in 2011. Chris's research covers various issues relating to the intersection of employment, globalisation and public and private regulation, with a particular interest in comparative employment relations, immigration and supply chains. He is co-editor of International and Comparative Employment Relations (6th edition, 2015), and an Associate Editor of the Journal of Industrial Relations. Chris was awarded the Luis Aparicio Prize for best emerging scholar by the International Labour and Employment Relations Association in 2015.