Ways to prevent or control vicarious trauma

Some people are inherently more resilient to secondary trauma due to personal traits, such as conscientiousness, which allow them to overcome feelings of despair or hopelessness that may arise when dealing with a trauma victim.¹³ Others, who are more prone to emotional instability or neuroticism, may struggle to cope with successive cases that centre on traumatic experiences.¹⁴

Members of chambers should be mindful of managing vicarious trauma for themselves, but also in relation to colleagues. Where a colleague appears to be at risk of vicarious trauma, confronting them can worsen the potential effect of the trauma if not approached in a careful and knowledgeable manner. Awareness of the symptoms, effects and manifestations of vicarious trauma is critical to playing a constructive role in its prevention and treatment.

Bradey identified several preliminary methods of dealing with traumatic content, such as marking files with a warning, restricting access to the file and taking scheduled breaks from working. Bradey also counsels in favour of erecting physical boundaries such as not taking traumatic files home or at least designating a specific room for working on those files, so that traumatic content is physically, and, it is to be hoped, also mentally, separate from personal spaces for relaxation, sleep or spending time with family and friends.

Bradey further identifies processes that can be employed in anticipation of matters likely to trigger vicarious trauma, such as effective and continuous mentoring, speaking with colleagues, wellbeing checks administered by mental health professionals, and managing workloads.

NSW Bar Association initiatives

BarCare is an independent professional counselling service designed to assist members of the New South Wales Bar to manage emotional and stress-related problems, such as marital breakdowns, drug or alcohol dependency and practice pressures. Go to the website at http://barcare.org

The Tristan Jepson Memorial Foundation (TJMF) is an independent, volunteer, charitable organisation whose objective is to decrease work-related psychological ill-health in the legal community and to promote workplace psychological health and safety. The TJMF Best Practice Guidelines for the Legal Profession are designed to protect and promote psychological health and safety in the legal workplace. The Guidelines have been endorsed by the NSW Mental Health Commission, which was one of 26 inaugural signatories, as were the College of Law and the university law schools. There are currently over 140 signatories to the TJMF Guidelines including the NSW Bar Association.

The TJMF Guidelines have been modified for use in Chambers and a Mental Health and Wellbeing Policy was developed by 6 St James. Both the Modified TJMF Guidelines and the Mental Health and Wellbeing Policy are available from the Wellbeing Committee of the NSW Bar Association.

The seminar given by Robyn Bradey in March of this year can be viewed at https://www.nswbar.asn.au/for-members/ health-and-wellbeing

ENDNOTES

- Gillian Iliffe and Lyndall Steed, 'Exploring the Counselor's Experience of Working With Perpetrators and Survivors of Domestic Violence' (2000) 15 Journal of Interpersonal Violence 393; Karen Ortlepp and Earle Friedman, 'Prevalence and Correlates of Secondary Traumatic Stress in Workplace Lay Trauma Counselors' (2002) 15(3) Journal of Traumatic Stress 213.
- 2 Lisa McCann and Laurie Pearlman, 'Vicarious Traumatization: A Framework for Understanding the Psychological Effects of Working with Victims' (1990) 3(1) Journal of Traumatic Stress 131, 132.
- 3 Karen Saakvitne and Laurie Pearlman, Transforming the Pain: A Workbook on Vicarious Traumatization (WW Norton & Company, 1996).
- 4 Robyn Bradey, 'Identifying, Mitigating and Managing Vicarious Trauma in Legal Settings: A Manual for Senior Lawyers, Practice Managers, Supervisors and Mentors' (2016).
- 5 Lila Vrklevski and John Franklin, 'Vicarious Trauma: The Impact on Solicitors of Exposure to Traumatic Material' (2008) 14(1) Traumatology 106, 107.
- 6 Saakvitne and Pearlman, above n 5.
- 7 Laura Schauben and Patricia Frazier, 'Vicarious Trauma: The Effects on Female Counsellors of Working with Sexual Violence Survivors' (1995) 19(1) Psychology of Women Quarterly 49; Ginny Sprang, Carlton Craig and James Clark, 'Secondary Traumatic Stress and Burnout in Child Welfare Workers: A Comparative Analysis of Occupational Distress Across Professional Groups' (2011) 90(6) Child Welfare 149; Grace Maguire and Mitchell Byrne, 'The Law is Not as Blind as it Seems: Relative Rates of Vicarious Trauma Among Lawyers and Mental Health Professionals' (2016) Psychiatry, Psychology and Law 1, 2.
- 8 Vrklevski and Franklin, above n 7.
- 9 Discussed in Adele Bergin and Nerina Jimmieson, Australian Lawyer Well-Being: Workplace Demands, Resources and the Impact of Time-Billing Targets' (2014) 21 Psychiatry, Psychology and Law 427.
- 10 Christine Parker, "The 'Moral Panic' Over Psychological Wellbeing in the Legal Profession: A Personal or Political Ethical Response' (2014) 37(3) UNSW Law Journal 1103, 1106.
- 11 Maguire and Byrne, above n 9, 7.
- 12 Ibid 8.
- 13 Keren Cohen and Paula Collens, "The Impact of Trauma Work on Trauma Workers: A Metasynthesis on Vicarious Trauma and Vicarious Post-traumatic Growth' (2013) 5(6) Psychological Trauma: Theory, Research, Practice, and Policy 570.
- 14 Maguire and Byrne, above n 9, 8.

The Barristers' Benevolent Association

The Barristers' Benevolent Association of New South Wales was established as a scheme whereby financial assistance may be provided to persons who are (or have been) members of the New South Wales Bar and who have practised predominantly in NSW. There are no fixed circumstances in which such assistance may be provided save for it being directed to 'necessitous and deserving cases'. It provides a fund for those who are suffering from hardship either in the short term or long term.

The funding is an important part of the collegiate life of the bar and how we look after each other.

Case study one

I was in my first few years at the bar when I felt a crushing pain in my chest. I was to begin a two-week trial the following Monday, and wanted to dismiss the pain as an expression of anxiety, or indigestion. Luckily, my partner persuaded me to call an ambulance. I had suffered a major heart attack. I received great care, but I was unable to work for a significant period of time, and a substantial tax bill was due.

A concerned colleague contacted the Bar Association's Benevolent Fund on my behalf. The fund provided an unsecured loan which gave me the breathing space I needed to concentrate on my recovery, and the time I need to return to good health.

Case study two

My eight year old son suffered a catastrophic accident which left him requiring full-time care. As a result, I had to stop work to care for him full-time over several years. As a result, our family went into substantial debt, and were under significant stress.

After several years, I wanted to return to practice but did not have the resources to fund my return. I contacted the Bar Association's Benevolent Fund. The fund agreed to make a short-term contribution to the cost of accommodation in chambers, which was enough to allow me to re-establish myself in practice.

For information on the Barristers' Benevolent Association of New South Wales, go to https://www.nswbar.asn. au/for-members/benevolent-association