Editors' Foreword

Welcome, readers and contributors, to the 3rd volume of the Perth International Law Journal. We are thankful to the many individuals who helped complete this volume, and in particular, the peer reviewers who assisted the Journal in maintaining its academic rigour.

The 3rd volume, excluding the Special Issue on international aviation law, is entirely double-blind peer reviewed, with the contributors to this volume presenting thoughtful and interesting perspectives on international law across a number of areas.

The Journal, along with the UWA International Law Society, was founded to both expose students to the breadth and depth of international law, and to provide students with an opportunity to have their work reviewed and published in an academic journal.

As with past editors of the Journal, our Advisory Council provided valuable advice and thoughtful guidance on a range of issues, and we are grateful for their support.

Now more than ever, where national and international perspectives on international law are increasingly shifting, analysis of the rules-based system of international law is increasingly relevant. In this vein, the contribution of younger scholars – the policymakers and leaders of the future – is of mounting importance. The work of our contributors in this volume builds upon the success of the Journal thus far, and we are immensely proud of this development. As such, we are pleased to present the 3rd volume of the Perth International Law Journal.
